Desde su descubrimiento, el Plasma Rico en Plaquetas (PRP) ha despertado un gran interés en la comunidad científica. En el ámbito de la cirugía oral y maxilofacial el PRP se ha utilizado a modo de injerto autólogo como vehículo de diferentes factores de crecimiento y fibrina, con el propósito de mejorar la cicatrización tanto de tejidos duros como de tejidos blandos. Estos efectos benéficos sobre la cicatrización de tejidos se deben a que el PRP actúa como un amplificador de la respuesta biológica natural de la curación de heridas. Sin embargo existen controversias acerca de la utilidad del PRP en función del tejido sobre el que se aplica. En este libro tratamos de sintetizar mediante diferentes estudios en qué casos el PRP es realmente efectivo.
