This is a genealogy tracing four families from their homelands on their journey to Texas. Each family traveled different paths to finally meet in Jack County, Texas, in the late 1800's. The Burchel family traveled from Virginia through the mid-West United States during the Civil War before finally arriving in Texas in 1870. The Campsey family left Ireland in the 1790s to settle in Pennsylvania. From that starting point, the family spread across the nation to West Virginia, Ohio, and other states before finally arriving in Texas in the 1880s. Leaving France to escape religious persecution, the Dumas family arrived in Texas traveling the southern route through Virginia and Alabama before landing in Texas in the 1880s. Finally, the Scarber family whose name changes make for a challenging task in identifying familial relationships, arrived in Texas during the 1880s after their departure from England in the 1680s. Their journeys to Pennsylvania, Virginia, Tennessee, and Arkansas before reaching Texas shows us how families in America move ever westward in the pursuit of their dreams. A great reference for anyone interested in the Scarber (Scarborough), Burchel, Campsey, or Dumas genealogies and especially interesting for the descendants of these families. The author writes about "my uncle" and "my great grandmother" making this very personal to him, his siblings, and his maternal first cousins.
